

Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander Family Caregivers

SUMMARY

Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander (AANHPI) family caregivers are more likely to care for multiple care recipients. They frequently engage in activities such as communicating with health care providers, advocating for their care recipients, and arranging outside services. They more often find coordinating care across health care and service providers to be difficult. AANHPI caregivers are also more likely to find medical tasks challenging.

DATA HIGHLIGHTS

6%

of all family caregivers are AANHPI

31%

care for more than one care recipient

73%

report communicating with health care providers around caregiving

69%

report advocating for their care recipient with health care providers

43%

report arranging for outside services

22%

report that their medical/nursing caregiving tasks are difficult

34%

report difficulty in coordinating care for their care recipient

<https://doi.org/10.26419/ppi.00373.005>